Shout OUTS

- Winter sports season has come to an end hopefully taking with it the cold harsh winter we have endured this year.
- Our girls and boys basketball teams had a great season the camaraderie on and off the court made it a fun season to watch and be a part of.
- Our wrestling teams had a fantastic season sending 3 Bobcats to wrestle in the state tournament.
- Junior High boys basketball ended their season placing 2nd at the Bayard Tournament.
- Girls wrestling had great numbers and was a new opportunity for many students.
- Speech is still rolling and our students are entertaining their audiences everywhere they perform.
- FFA and FCCLA members are gearing up and getting ready for their state competitions.
- eSports has ended their winter season. Their spring season has begun so far 14 students have participated in challenges this year.
- The Science Olympiad team competed several times in an online format.
- Next up: Track, Quiz Bowl, and Dinner Theater teams are getting ready to take on their seasons!

From the Desk of the Principal

We have had an AWESOME 3rd Quarter in the academic world. We had several weeks where the 7th grade, 8th grade, Junior, and Seniors had NO students ineligible. We also had a week where there were are ONLY 3 ineligible students and 2 on warning week!! KUDOS to students, parents and staff for working with our kids and sending a message that their academic success is important!! With the end of the quarter next week please check in with your students to make sure they are on track to pass their 3rd quarter classes!!

We have completed winter 7th-8th grade NSCAS testing in the areas of Math and English. It is exciting to report that all areas scored higher than the state and regional scores!!

Math: 8th grade 1238-Region 1232

7th grade 1237-Region 1216

English: 8th grade 2547-Region 2541

7th grade 2539-Region 2525

Hope Squad Goals

Hope Squad had the great honor of hosting our first speaker, Troy Sorensen, on his experience with mental health. We are very grateful to have him come in and share his story and helping us take our first step in removing the negative stigma of Mental Health.

K-4 Counseling

K-4 has been working on controlling emotions and understanding how the brain works when emotions are high. Please practice at home what self-talk looks like for yourself and when YOU use it to help work through emotions.

5th-8th Counseling

5th-6th have been working on self-esteem journals and learning how to process emotions. 8th Grade is going through the beginning stages of 8 to Great. On February 28th, 8th grade will also visit CSC to gain some insight on choices they have to make in their HS career.

Mrs. Glass-ELA Classroom

A Sneak Peak into Hemingford's ELA Classroom

English Language Arts with Ms. Glass is heading in new and exciting directions!

Our weekly schedule includes the following: Monday/Wednesday literary analysis bell-ringers and discussion; Tuesday/Thursday Grammar Practice with our brand new IntoLiterature curriculum; and Focused Friday, where we read the first chapter of a new book and then segue into vocabulary practice. To better facilitate the extensive reading expected of our students, Ms. Glass raised $894 on DonorsChoose for a new supply of books. This should result in students being able to check out copies of books for at-home reading rather than exclusively reading at home.

In 7th grade, we are exploring the wonder and terror of space in our unit that delves into both argumentative writing and rhetorical devices in written work on space travel. Students are engaging with articles that posit alternative viewpoints: should humans be the ones to adventure through the stars, or is this a field best explored through technological means? Together, as a class, we will use our analytical skills and come to a determination on which argument is stronger. Rylei Manion was particularly interested in the article "Robots Should Take to the Stars" by Eireen Caffall. Rylei said she found it interesting that private companies are trying to take on the work of exploring outer space and she thought the author's argument against that approach to space exploration was convincing.

9th grade English has taken a more dark and twisty approach to the study of English. Our current focus is on true crime literature. While also learning to communicate with respect about complicated topics, we are analyzing and comparing various accounts of different crimes. Paraprofessional Ann Payne is a recent addition to the Hemingford team. She was assigned to join our 9th grade classroom during 7th period and has been an integral part of our learning community. When asked what stood out to her about our ELA learning environment, Ann stated: "I joined the classroom at a great time! They have been doing a True Crime unit reading both "'Vigilante' Murder in the Heartland" and comparing the same events via an episode of the podcast Criminal. The class is currently working on a compare-contrast paper on the two. The class also participates in weekly grammar and vocab. Ms. Glass does a good job of explaining information the students may not fully understand. There is always open conversation. If a student gets stuck as they are working on developing an idea for a paper, Ms. Glass gives them an interpretation or suggestion to get them on the right track. I have enjoyed being in the classroom thus far and Ms. Glass is doing her best to keep the students engaged and encouraged."

Parker Wright took it upon himself to bring some themed cupcakes to our class.

We flexed our speaking and listening muscles when Sgt. Celestina Rossi, a blood spatter analyst from a Texas crime lab, video called our classroom and presented information on how crime scenes are investigated in real life. Sgt. Rossi was invited to the classroom by her great-niece, Hemingford student, Kail Miles. After the presentation, a number of students have since professed interest in pursuing a career in this field. One student, Sophie Hruby, stated in her reflection on the presentation that: “We learned that fingerprints are the fastest way to identify a person. This was another interesting fact and Sargent Rossis’ explanation was even better. Sargent Rossi said, “On a fingerprint like this [normal fingerprint] I can identify a suspect in probably a couple minutes.” I did not realize that they could do it that fast. Even on dehydrated skin or decomposing skin there are ways to get fingerprints off of the bodies, it just takes longer and takes a little more work.” Another student, Jake Eggers, expressed his gratitude for the people who work in the field of Crime Scene Investigation (CSI). He stated in his reflection: “[Criminal investigation] is very important in today's age because there are so many smart criminals and sly people. Some of the things people do are unpredictable and scary so we are very thankful for all the things they do for us and other people in this world. I don’t know what we would do if we didn’t have all the specialist and swat teams.” Jake and Sophie’s writing are excellent demonstrations of the high levels of engagement our ELA students are demonstrating in the classroom.

11th grade English is currently entrenched in a unit exploring the impact of technology on society and literature. Prior to beginning our reading of Fahrenheit 451 by Ray Bradbury, students prepared for a Socratic Seminar style discussion. Before discussion, students performed high-level analysis of, at minimum, four articles related to the topic of technology and its impact on society. They also incorporated historical and literary perspectives in their research through the examination of excerpts from Henry David Thoreau's On Walden Pond, who famously argued against technological advancements in favor of developing deeper connections with the natural world and cultivating personal happiness. The Socratic Seminar was held on January 31st, and Ms. Glass was impressed by how students utilized their critical thinking skills in the discussions on these readings.

In first period ELA one student, Jaxon Keane, even took the initiative to dress accordingly and donned a tunic for the event.

From a transcript of the conversations held during our recent 1st Period Socratic Seminar:

Ethan Plog: Should we move on to the next talking point?

Aiden Benda: Sure. (Reading from question list on the board) How does technology increase concerns about “learned helplessness”?

Ethan Plog: I’ve done a lot of research on learned helplessness.

Aiden Benda: People are becoming more and more useless as we make new stuff.

Jaxon Keane: Everything is done for you so you don't have to do it yourself and then you never have to learn how to do it yourself.

Angel Eisenhart-Palmer: So you might become dumb.

Ethan Plog: Less dumb and more... you don't see the point of trying.

Aiden Benda: You don't have certain skills so you rely a little more on technology. If it's not available then you wouldn't have the skills needed to do certain things.

Ethan Plog: So, on the point of learned helplessness, the point should be that we can un-learn learned helplessness.

From an excerpt from our Socratic Seminar conversation in 5th period ELA:

Breana: (Reading question from board) How will the future be impacted positively or negatively by technology? Can I go first? I have a really good comment on this.

Brooklyn: Yep.

Breana: In "Are We All Turning into Digital Zombies?", in paragraph seven, the author starts talking about ideas related to moving from a device filled world to AI bots. It's saying that everyone, instead of carrying around a mobile device, will have an AI bot that walks with them and will read them their emails, it will read them Facebook posts and say, "Oh, this is what Savanna's doing. Oh, Savanna posted this on Instagram. Here, I'll comment for you." And [the article] kind of makes the argument that we won't need devices and this addiction will fade away because we won't have devices. We will be able to take in the natural world more with AI bots because we won't have our heads shoved in our phones. I disagree with that completely because I feel like it's shifting the addiction from a mobile phone and putting it on an AI. You're just going to be constantly worried about "is my AI right beside me?" Instead of looking down at your phone you're just going to be looking to the side of you to make sure your AI bot didn't get run over or something.

Savanna: And on top of that, we would have to make room for all of these bots. There's how many people in the world? You have to make room for everybody.

Breana: I don't think that it will make us return to the natural world, I think it will just shift our attention to another form of device.

ELEMENTARY MARVELOUS ARTIST SPOTLIGHT!

In February, we studied the beautiful quilt stories of Harriet Powers, and Kindergarten made their own quilt stories with patterned paper. It was so exciting to watch Emberly Henderson tell her own story and include some sweet personal details like the first initial of family members names. She kept it simple, like our artist of the month did, but you can tell a lot of love went into it - just like Harriet's quilts!

Middle School Marvelous Artist Spotlight!

Brandon Eisenhart-Palmer has gone above and beyond this quarter with the new "Level Up" Art Program for our 5th & 6th Graders. He takes every after school opportunity he can get to come in for extra help on techniques and skills so he can progress and earn badges. He worked really hard on his Origami badge and tried some new and unique origami patterns - aiming to earn a Level 4 (the highest) for craftsmanship!

JR. HIGH MARVELOUS ARTIST SPOTLIGHT!

Jacob Garner has really been a "top hand" (hehe, see what I did there? 😊) this quarter in 8th Grade Art. I've appreciated his focus and drive, and his commitment to craftsmanship on his work. I've seen a lot of growth from last year, and it's pretty impressive! Your Zentangle Hand turned out awesome and I can't wait to see your finished self portrait!

High School Marvelous Artist Spotlight!

With our Picasso unit at the beginning of the quarter, we began by studying his realistic work and practicing our own with freehand drawing. We followed that up with a study of his Blue and Rose Periods and used the same images and chalk pastels to create our own emotion based pieces. Alex Hawkins knocked both of his out of the park!
